Drag a red chicken and a white chicken into the parents boxes, but do not click on the breed. How many of the possible results are for each of the following genotypes? What are the genotypes of descendants? Explain: In dominant/recessive inheritance patterns, the dominant allele is always expressed when present. Click on the race. Parent genotypes are written on the top and side of the square, as shown. Turn on the genotype. What are the results of the cross? Point for the red chicken. Compare: click on the race, until you have generated at least 1,000 offspring. How close are they? Scientists use the probability of predicting the results of different genetic crosses. What is the genotype of the red chicken? How do the percentages now match your prediction? What is the probability of each of the following outcomes? How many possible total results are there? (Note: FrÅFW is equivalent to ... Analyze: Analyze: Ae Homezygous Bun will have the same alleles for the pen color. Random chance often causes identical trials to have different results. Experiment: Drag four descendants to the holding cages. Drag the remaining chickens from the holding cages to the parents' boxes. Model: AÄnett SquareÄ is used to model the possible genotypes of offspring of a genetic cross. Click on the race search hours. Why was it important for you to raise chickens repeatedly in this experiment? Will the offspring be homozygous or heterozygous? Calculate: Punnett Squares can be used to predict the likely results of genetic crosses. Have they become more or less similar to their original prediction? Introduction: probability is the probability that a specific event will occur. A heterozygous chicken will have two different alleles for the color of the To calculate the probability, divide the number of a possible outcome type by the total number of all possible outcomes. Evaluate: Do the results of the cross match your prediction? prediction? times. Use your observations of this activity to describe how codominant inheritance patterns differ from dominant/recessive inheritance patterns. The genotype is the combination of alleles that an organism has. How did your results change as the number of trials you completed increased? Other traits are governed by alleles that share dominion. For example, if you flip a coin, the chance that it will land on the heads is equal to 1-2. With the "Genetics of Chicken GizmoÄ", he will study how codomania affects the inheritance of certain traits. If not, why do you think that was the case? The first square is full for you. Turn on the sample stats and they are shown as approximate percentage. Student Exploration: Chicken Genetics Vocabulary: allele, codomain, dominant, genotype, heterozygote, homozygote, phenotype, probability, Punnett square, recessive, judgement Previous knowledge questions (Do this before using gizmo). The picture shows a flower that was produced. Crossing a pure red flower with a pure white flower. Some traits are governed by alleles, which are dominant in other alleles. Draw conclusions: each time you raised the parent chickens, you completed a test. Collect Data: Click the breed 19 more times until it has generated 100 offspring. Question: What patterns of inheritance do the co-dominant traits show? Question: How can you use the probability of predicting the outcome of a codominant cross? This probability can be expressed as 1/2, 0.5 or 50%. Click Delete, and then drag one of the descendants to a main box. What do you think are representing the letters "r", "R", and in the genotypes? The appearance of an organism is its phenotype. Explain how you know. The recessive allele is only expressed when the dominant allele is not present. Drag a red chicken into the other box. Drag a white chicken into the other box. Test is only once he performs an experiment.
